“ Washington’s office market remains one of the most liquid in the country as it provides a stable tenant base, with upside provided by agency-anchored headquarters throughout the metro. ”

Washington’s office market had been stagnated due to the effects of the global pandemic. The weakness experienced in Washington in 2020 has continued into 2021 as net absorption was down sharply, pushing the vacancy rate into the highest since the 90’s. This short term analysis would be tempered with long-term potential, such as Amazon’s HQ2 expansion, Ellume’s 650,000 SF offices at Progress Labs, and TCR therapeutics 84,000 SF lease in North Rockville.

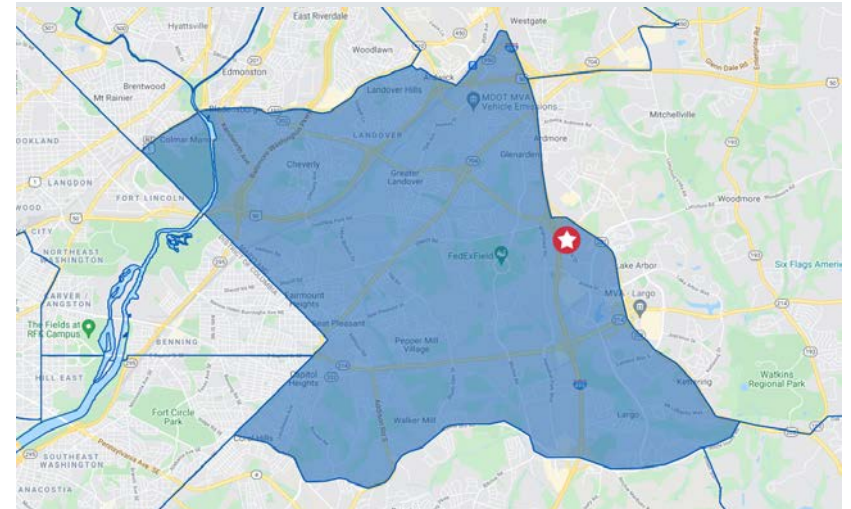

Washington’s office market remains one of the most liquid in the country as it provides a stable tenant base, with upside provided by agency-anchored

headquarters throughout the metro. The pandemic, however, was enough to slow down robust deal velocity in Washington. Over the past few years, Washington’s office market was clearing $8 billion in annual transaction volume. Although the first quarter of 2021 saw one of the worst quarterly volume to date, the first quarter of 2022 has already shown a more bullish market growing in today’s economic environment.

2022 has seen significant growth in absorption with over 1.7 million SF of net new construction delivered to the market with only 765,000 SF not yet absorbed. Leasing rates continue to escalate.

Landover / Largo / Capitol Heights Submarket

The Landover/Largo/Capitol Heights submarket is a mid-sized submarket that contains around 4.0 million square feet of office space. Despite the recent peak in vacancy, development in the area continues to be substantial. With Largo being a newly named “downtown” for Prince George’s County, many of the existing amenities and demand drivers are being redeveloped and renewed, attracting additional tenants to the area.
